We can identify a number of institutions and decision-makers involved in the key stages within the criminal justice process in England and Wales.

The police

The police are by far the most researched group in the criminal justice system (Brown, 1996). They are also, perhaps, the most significant, because of their gatekeeping function in the system. The police operate as an important initial filter on public reports. Although the police have a